A LEGACY BUILT IN INGERSOLL

The story of Ingersoll Paper Box began in 1922, when founder Robert Skinner launched the business as an ice cream cone manufacturer. Over the decades, the company evolved alongside the packaging industry, growing into a leading folding carton producer while remaining rooted in the same community where it first began.

Today, under the leadership of Sarah Skinner, President and Owner, IPB continues the family tradition of entrepreneurship, innovation, and commitment to quality.

The Skinner family credits Ingersoll's strong industrial roots and supportive community as key reasons the company has thrived for generations.

MILESTONES AND ACHIEVEMENTS

Few businesses can say they've operated continuously for more than a century. For Ingersoll Paper Box, reaching that milestone reflects not only strong leadership and innovation but also the dedication of generations of employees and customers.

Over the years, the company has embraced new technologies and industry advancements while maintaining its commitment to exceptional quality and service.

Today, IPB produces packaging for major global brands, meeting strict regulatory standards including FDA and Health Canada compliance, as well as quality accreditations such as ISO, BRC, CGMP, and GMI printing certification.

A WORKPLACE AND COMMUNITY FAMILY

At its core, Ingersoll Paper Box is built around its people. The company currently employs 65 team members, many of whom have built long and rewarding careers with the organization. Over the years, countless part-time employees, students, and full-time staff have passed through IPB's doors, each contributing to the company's growth and culture.

Beyond the workplace, IPB actively supports the community through its "Box of Kindness" program, helping fund and support a variety of local and global initiatives. The company has contributed to:

When Ingersoll Paper Box first began in 1922, the company's main product wasn't packaging — it was ice cream cones! Some of the original equipment used to make those cones has been carefully refurbished and is proudly displayed at the company's Ingersoll facility today.
